Join us for a 90-minute, in-person training for law enforcement officers.

We will look at what officers may see and hear when someone reports sexual assault, including common responses to trauma and how trauma can affect communication and memory. Join us for a 90-minute, in-person training for law enforcement officers. We will look at what officers may see and hear when someone reports sexual assault, including common responses to trauma and how trauma can affect communication and memory. Participants will discuss ways to respond to survivors and how law enforcement and victim advocates can work together.

The training will include conversation and real-life examples that relate to the work of officers responding to sexual assault in rural communities.

Learning Objectives:

- Identified at least two (2) responses to sexual assault that officers may see or hear when talking with a survivor.
 - Explained two (2) ways trauma can affect communication and memory after sexual assault.
 - Described at least one (1) way law enforcement and victim advocates can work together to support survivors.
